Dealer notes

The 2018 Tesla Model 3 Long Range Battery arrives with one owner since new and a personal-use history, the kind of background that matters even more on an EV, where how a battery was treated day to day actually shapes what you're buying. The rear-wheel drive electric motor produces 271 horsepower and 307 lb-ft of torque delivered instantly, with zero lag between your foot and the response, which is the moment most first-time EV drivers understand exactly why this car changed the conversation. This is the car for the driver who got tired of paying for gasoline and decided the future was worth switching to today. Slide into the black interior and the Model 3's minimalist cabin still feels genuinely ahead of its time. Multi-zone automatic climate control, an 8-way power passenger seat with 4-way lumbar support, a heated 60/40 folding rear seat, and a premium sound system create a driving environment built entirely around the driver's experience rather than a dashboard full of buttons. The panoramic glass roof opens the cabin to natural light in a way that changes how the space feels on every trip, and the trunk plus frunk cargo configuration gives you genuine practicality that a lot of sedans this size simply can't match. Auto-leveling LED headlamps with automatic high beams, perimeter and approach lights, and Tesla's over-the-air software approach mean this car has likely gained capability since the day it left the factory, something no gasoline vehicle can claim. A one-owner, personal-use Long Range Model 3 at this mileage represents a genuinely smart entry point into EV ownership, skipping the steepest depreciation while still delivering the range and performance that made this car a category leader. Come see it at Carlux in Waukegan and experience what driving electric actually feels like across Chicagoland.
