Dealer notes

Zoom Classic Cars presents this 1955 Ford F-1 Pickup — AZ truck that is All-Steel, FE-Powered & Fully Restored. The 1955 F-1 represents the final year of the first-generation F-Series design before Ford introduced its substantially redesigned 1956 trucks. By this point, Ford's F-Series had firmly established itself as one of America's most important light-duty truck lines. There is something undeniably appealing about a well-built 1950s Ford pickup, and this 1955 Ford F-1 checks all the right boxes. It has the unmistakable styling of Ford's mid-1950s pickups, an exceptionally solid and original steel body, a strong FE V-8 under the hood, automatic transmission, a beautifully finished oak bed, and is a clean, usable restoration that has seen fewer than 700 miles since completion. The current owner purchased this truck more than 10 years ago specifically because of its unusually solid, original condition. Rather than starting with a rusty or heavily patched truck, he had an excellent foundation to work with and subsequently completed a comprehensive body-on restoration. One of the most impressive aspects of this F-1 is the original steel body. The truck is extremely solid and, remarkably, has no patch panels. The original panels remain intact and fit together very nicely, with excellent alignment throughout. The body was refinished by the current owner in a period-inspired presentation featuring a classic black finish accented by 1950s-style striping and flames. The paint presents in overall excellent condition, with only a few minor imperfections on the right front fender as shown. All of the original-style chrome trim and Ford badging remain intact and are in excellent condition, giving the truck the right amount of period character without making it look overly customized. The original wood pickup bed was replaced with a beautiful new oak bed, providing a striking contrast to the white exterior and completing the traditional pickup-truck look. Power comes from a rebuilt 352 cubic-inch Ford FE V-8, a member of Ford's legendary FE engine family. The FE was introduced in the late 1950s and went on to become one of Ford's most important and enduring V-8 engine families, powering everything from full-size Fords and trucks to some of Ford's most celebrated performance cars. The 352 FE equipped with Holley Carb is particularly well suited to a vintage pickup. It provides the traditional Ford V-8 sound and plenty of usable torque while retaining the reputation for durability and longevity that made the FE family such a mainstay of Ford's lineup. The engine is backed by a Ford C4 automatic transmission with column shift, making this F-1 considerably easier and more enjoyable to drive than a typical original three-speed manual truck. Additional mechanical features include dual exhaust, a newer gas tank mounted underneath the truck, and a battery relocated underneath for a cleaner engine compartment and improved practicality. Look underneath this truck and you'll find one of its greatest surprises: an exceptionally clean and rust free undercarriage. The truck has been fitted with a Volare front-end conversion, giving it modernized front suspension characteristics and contributing to the truck's excellent road manners. The underside is remarkably clean and presents very well, with the dual-exhaust system and other mechanical components neatly installed. The interior was completely refreshed during the restoration and features a new bench seat, headliner and wiring, along with a set of attractive new Ford chrome gauges. The result is a simple, functional and appropriately styled interior that retains the character of a 1950s Ford pickup while providing a much nicer environment for today's driving. The truck also sits on custom chrome wheels fitted with newer whitewall tires, giving it a classic custom-truck appearance that works particularly well with the white exterior, oak bed and period-style graphics. This is not a truck that needs to be imagined into something special—it already is. The truck runs, drives and handles very well. It has the look and personality of a traditional 1950s Ford pickup, but with the mechanical upgrades and automatic transmission that make it far more practical for modern cruising. A handsome, solid and highly usable example of Ford's iconic F-1 pickup—built to be driven, enjoyed and admired. Stored in MA with clean title in the owner's name.
