Dealer notes

Ladies and gentlemen, boys and girls, those who identify as a minivan hater but secretly love the space, feast your eyes on this glorious 2018 Chevrolet Traverse LT. With a jaw-dropping 10,079 miles, it's so low on the odometer that the break-in period is barely over. This car is still basically an infant, but one with the ability to haul your entire family and their luggage. Here's why you need to park this suburban beast in your driveway: The mileage This Traverse has fewer miles on it than most people put on their sneakers in a year. It's spent more time sitting in a climate-controlled garage than it has being exposed to the harsh realities of the open road. The previous owner clearly bought it for a once-a-year trip to the grocery store and the occasional Sunday drive around the block. The "new for 2018" attitude This isn't your grandma's Traverse. Chevrolet completely redesigned this model for 2018, giving it a modern, truck-like design that says, "I'm a cool parent, not a regular parent". The new Traverse is even bigger than the last, meaning more room for your kids, your dogs, or that giant inflatable swan you bought on a whim. The interior Step inside and you'll find a world of comfort and convenience. The LT trim comes with cloth seats, an 8-inch infotainment system with Apple CarPlay and Android Auto, and three-zone climate control to keep everyone happy. The previous owner barely used it, so the interior looks and feels pristine. If you've
